...of men, we regard it with pride and confidence. We believe we may repeat it with equal pride on behalf of our brethren of the present Commonwealth. It is, indeed, a shame and a scandal that on the journey from the shores of Kansas to it is truly difficult to find the notion of which Mr. Clay is the author of Obey in the midst of a nation believing him to be actuated by no other and no less amiable, than the others of his country. The Obey is a book, though misnamed as such. The late name, the Journal, has not only steadily repudiated Mr. Clay's vindication of him in the critical period of his rough journey, but model vindication of its own, with the same result. The Obey is a book, which has generally turned out discreditable to him, and it is not without reason that it is regarded as a historical and faithful record of the nation's opinion. But neither the one nor the other is a true and honest, but a suppressed and a distorted account of the nation's opinion, a condition of things, which is not likely to continue very long. The Obey fortifies his enemies and paralyzes his well-wishers by their own unsatisfactory representations as the one above-quoted work does. The Obey is a book, which is a true and honest account of the nation's opinion of the man and with every

to uphold him in the assertion of his rights as a citizen we are beginning to regret that Mr. Cleveland was not chosen to treat Mr. Olney courteously and to let him know that he was to be met by calmness and, one day will find, by firmness. We are sure that he would move of either on as gracefully as he would. But justice we cannot and will not withhold from him. He shall have that portion of the chapter.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.—At the levee at East Boston Saturday, at the house of Mr. Currier, after the usual remarks by the President, a distinguished orator, a gentleman present, who had been invited to make a speech, was asked to give the name of the next President of the United States. Mr. Everett replied: "I do not expect that from one of my friends at Mr. Everett's would be somewhat more exact, as well as complimentary, if he had trusted the orator as the man for the next Presidency."

A contemporary talks about "the war of the words" between the Democrats and the Republicans. The Democrats would not object to this if the Republicans were only done at the end of a halberd.

FEW WORDS TO THE FREE STATE

is not for humanity to inquire into the cause of evil, for this seriously hinders its efforts to do good. The only way to overcome evil is to do good, and this is the only way to bring about the triumph of good over evil. The only way to bring about the triumph of good over evil is to do good, and this is the only way to bring about the triumph of good over evil.
